AUTHOR: "Mature people are not made out of good times but bad. . . Man's extremity is God's opportunity"

How To Be Mature

By DR. HYMAN JUDAH SCHACHTEL Author of "The Real Enjoyment Of Lining"

"When it is dark enough, men see the stars," - RALPH WALDO EMERSON

Emerson's words are echoed by an old Oriental proverb, which goes like this: "All sunshine makes a desert." What these sayings express is not an excuse, not a covering-up, for the tragic side of life. Rather, I think they speak the truth and give us strength. I think that they go deep into the understanding of the real nature of our lives Mature people are made not out of good times but out of had times. Man's extremity is God's opportunity. It is in a crisis that the best in us comes to the fore. This very age in which we live, which is so turbulent, so confusing, so uncertain, is an anvil upon which God can remake us for the good. for the better.

It is in the encircling gloom that we come to realize the importance of being led by the kindly light of the Eternal One. As Emerson says, it is in the night that we can see the stars which are invisible by day.

What I am asking for is mature outlook, reasonable expe tations, a calm and steadfast mind and the patience with which to meet whatever comes with courage and faith in God, instead of with bitterness and resentment.

FOR QUIZ KIDS. Our sixthgrade exam some time ago drew so many letters asking for more that this week we are publishing a seventhgrade exam on Page 25.

·For those readers who find even the seventh grade easy, here's an old favorite that will give you a real workout: There are two sisters. Cora and Anne. Cora is three times as old as Anne was when Cora was twice as old as Anne is now. In three years Cora will be three times as old as Anne was two years ago. How old are they? When you get a solution (or give up) see the correct answer, below.

WORTH THE FINE! Our fishing expert, besides reminding us that "Let's Go Fishing" week starts next Saturday, also tells the story of a man who was arrested for catching a dozen more fish than the law allowed.

Fined $25 and costs, he paid off without a word, but lingered before the judge's bench. The judge asked, "What are you waiting for? "Well, Your Honor," replied the

Griffith adapts lke "jacket"

From The Military

By BERT BACHARACH

Andy Griffith, star of Broadway's hilarious "No Time For Sergeants," carries the military influence into his selection of sports wear. His shirt (above) is a striped adaptation of the famed Eisenhower jacket, with convertible collar and adjustable waistline.

The Winner: Top man in the National Father's Day Committee's contest to find the father with the greatest number of living sons: 53-year-old H. H. Tygart, Sr., of Tulsa, Oklahoma — a driver for a wholesale florist. He has 12 sons.

Clothes Care: When wearing a lightcolored suit, be extra careful getting in and out of cars to avoid brushing hinges, etc. ... Lightweight summer clothes cannot take the pocket-overloading that heavier suits can. They're likely to stretch, even tear.

Helpful Hints: Cardening time reminds us to scrape fingernalls over a wet cake of scap before doing dirty work. Afterward, the scoap rimes out; nails are clean. . . Tie Advice: Are the knots in your ties as neat as they could be? It's a simple process to get the "dimple" in the knot and make your ties look better. Before tightening the tie knot, form a crease or pleat in the center of the tie with your index finger — as in drawing (1). Keep finger in position as you tighten (2). There's your "dimple" (3).

A leaden day just before last Christmas hung heavily over the Bonn-Cologne airport. Half-frozen West German officials and reporters stopped shivering as they concentrated on a silve-haired, chunky man who strode briskly toward them. A smile wreathed his broad face above the fur collar of his well-cut greatcoat.

"I'm so happy, so very happy to be here," murmured Valerian Alexandrovitch Zorin, first Soviet Ambassador to the Federal Republic of Germany. "I hope my stay will be most productive."

Offhand it sounded like a pat greeting from any newly arrived diplomat. It took on more significance because Zorin arrived from Moscow soon after starchy Chancellor Konrad Adenauer agreed with Russia's collective leaders, Nikolai Bulganin and Nikita Khruschey, to set up diplomatic relations.

But a couple of men in that cold receiving line remembered a similar raw day in February, 1948, at an airport in Prague. A few days later, with Zorin pulling the strings, Zezchoslovakia became a Soviet satellite. That — Continued on page 23

A CENTENNIAL FOR

New York's "Big Back Yard"

A hundred years ago. New York bought the land for Central Park. Ever since, people have been thinking up "better" uses for it

BY CREIGHTON PEET

One hundred years ago this month, the Common Council of the City of New York passed an ordinance creating a board of 11 commissioners - Washington Irving, president — to administer a tract to be called "The Central Park." The land, which had been bought earlier in the year for $5,500,000, was to become America's first great formal park. Today Central Park is the "big back yard" for an estimated 5,000,000 people a year - an oasis of grass, trees and still water taken for granted by most New Yorkers. But its history has been nowhere near so calm as its ponds. Many people have had many ideas about its proper use. It has meant, almost literally, a hundred years' war to keep the park's 840 acres intact.

The din started as far back as 1850, when William Cullen Bryant, Irving and Andrew J. Downing, editor of 'The Horticulturist," first proposed such a park. There were factions who insisted the "lower classes" would take over. Fifth Avenue would be lined with grog shops, the park filled with drunks. The champions of the people, on the other hand, feared that the park would be a preserve of "the upper ten who ride in fine carriages. It was not until 14 years later that the park began to take real shape. The basic plan drawn by Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux was picked in 1858 as the best of 32 designs submitted anonymously. It was titled simply "Greensward," and the original now hangs in the lobby of the Arsenal Building in the park. This park was to provide the citizens of New York with a rural escape. Roads and paths would twist and turn, swamps would be drained to form lakes, and planting done so artfully that most of the time the stroller would not see the city at all. It was also to this end - about 75 years before the automobile - that Olmsted and Vaux designed the transverse roads to allow crosstown city traffic to flow through the park. Not only were these roads sunk in deep channels, but trees and shrubbery were planted so that the transverse roads are still all but invisible. When the site for Central Park was selected many doubted that anything could be done with it. It was a barren no-man's-land of rocky escarpments. Hundreds of squatters lived in caves, tents and shanties and indulged in such trades as "cinder sifting, rag picking and bone boiling.

Idle Land, Busy Minds

But the squatters were relocated in another rocky dump known as Corcoran's Roost - where the UN now stands. Central Park was literally blasted into shape. Rocky ridges were cut down and hollows filled in to form meadows. In all, some 10,000,000 horse-cart loads of rock were removed

As construction advanced, landowners facing the park forgot their fears. Land was doubling in value every few years and fine homes were being built. As for the city, increased tax returns from blocks around the park were far outrunning the loss of revenue from park lands. But the sight of so much "idle" land almost imme diately began to give enterprising citizens ideas. There were, of course, periodic proposals to cut off the bottom 10 or 15 blocks of the park and sell it in lots. But highminded patriotic, literary and artistic enthusiasts saw the park as a kind of stage or exhibition ground on which their pet projects would not only be in the public eve, but would receive official approval.

One major attempt was the move to have Grant's

THE REGINNING: Crew at work on one of the sunken transverse roads that are in use even today

Tomb erected there. Later, there were proposals to build an outdoor theaster seating [00,000, to install a steamboat and full-rigard sailing ship on the reservoir, and even to level the lower half of the park and pave it with asphalt. Literary and musical societies did suoced in putting up statuse to famous poets and musicains, and historical figures are well represented. But there have been other statuses—perhaps hundreds—which park superintendents have managed to keep out. The most speciatual at attempt to take over Central Park came in 1892, when some trotting-near operators quietly pushed through legislation in Albany to bair 70-foot-wide speedway right through the middle. But the newspapers got wind of it and there arose a strainling public clamor. The law was repealed, only 39 days after it was passed!

The battle to keep commercial establishments out of the park, and in fact limit all kinds of buildings, has been fairly successful. The Metropolitan Museum of Art, which of course is not commercial, is the only large institution in the park, except for the Tavern-on-the-Green, the city-owned restaurant. A temporary incursion was Mayor Jimmy Walker's

Central Park Casino, which started out in Civil War days as the Ladies' Refreshment Salon. The jaunty Jimmy remodeled it into an ornate and incredibly expensive night club. When another Mayor, Fiorello La Guardia, came in, he demolished the pleasure dome and built a playground on the site.

There was the time, too, the park had an official who thought that the most wonderful sight in the world was that of the Sixth Avenue Elevated trains rounding the high curve at 110th Street. He had a vista cut through the trees. When the commissioner learned of this he quickly filled in the vista with a planning program. Commissioner Robert Motes took over the city's parks at a time when all city recreation areas we more than a million children and many millions of adults looking for play space.

New Ideas Every Year

Commissioner. Moses built 18 fenced-in playgrounds for toddlers, all near entrances to the park. For older children (and adults) there were new ball fields and a modern skating rink used for ice or roller skating. For oldsters there were outdoor chess and checker tables, and a secluded bowling green which would have delighted Rip van Winkle.

There was in 1955 a proposal to build additional facilities for older people in the Ramble, a wild pick affective of woodland favored by birdwatchers, who have observed woodland favored by birdwatchers, who have observed hundreds of species in the party. This project east helved after squawks from the watchers. Just last month, Mosse had a dispute with mothers when the started to replace an open area with a parking lot. So, after a full century, the wat rows on. The weer.

started to replace an open area with a parking lot. So, after a full century, the war goes on. The year 1956 has brought a proposal to hold a $230,000, nineday arts festival there and a Bronx city councilman has revived the old idea of selling out the southern end of the park. At least the first hundred years are over, and you know what they say about them. — The End

Week-End Gem Hunter

Ever hear of "rock hounds"? They're part-time prospectors who poke around the countryside for semiprecious stones. Here's a fascinating new hobby

By THOMAS H. MILLER

Director, Federal Bureau of Mines As told to A. E. Hotchner

Last year some 50,000 children and adults, members of a fast-growing new group of hobbyists called "rock hounds," picked up stones and pebbles from the beaches, woods and from the beaches, woods and fields of America that had an estimated value of more than $700,000. These were no ordinary rocks, but gem stones. They can be found throughout the 48 states and Alaska.

Ranging from the agate, which is the most widely distributed, to less common but still plentiful rocks and pebbles — like jade, opal and zircon — 70 different kinds of semiprecious gem stones are found in the U.S. Although we are very poor in precious stones like diamonds and emeralds, we are unsurpassed in our quantities and varieties of gem-stones.

These stones are naturally more plentiful in some states than others, but no matter where you live in the U.S., you may find one or more of these species of prize stones in your neighborhood.

Those of you who live in the West and certain states in the East have richer pickings than those who live in the Midwest, but even in Washington, D. C. — not considered a good gem area — you can make an occasional exciting find.

Actually, these gem stones are not difficult to find. A formation of granite may have a cluster of beryl or amethyst brittling on its surface. Beach sands are a likely source of zircon and garnet, and the bed of stream may yield a cache of agates, sapphires or jade. A few years back, a California rock hound, amin rock hound, amin pursuing his hobby, found a massive jade boulder which, after cutting, was estimated to be worth about $52.00. In 1954, a rock hound in Maine stumbled on a large hunk of tournamine that was also worth several $50.00.

The great thing about rock-hounding is that it adds zest to the very pleasurable pastime of walking along scenic paths. Many a father and son now make pebble exploration an exciting week-end pursuit.

Another reason is that sooner or later one of these rock hounds is going to make a "find" of one of the many important strategic minerals, such as manganes or nickel or brillion. The more people we can interest in rock-bunding, the better our chances of finding some of these minerals. Rock-Hounding Equipment this connection. It is a preprint of the chapter on gen stones from the Bureau of Mines 1953 Minerals Yearbook. $1,000,000 Business

There is another aspect of rock-hounding which has grown by leaps and bounds in recent years: the process of cutting and polishing the stones after they are found. There are approximately 2,000,000 home gem work-shops in operation. The value of the polished gems which are produced annually is in the millions of dollars. Basic equipment for the amateur lapidary - that's the long-hair word for him - consists of a diamond saw. coarse and fine grinding wheels, sanding and polishing discs, and should not run more than $75 or so. As he gains experience, he usually gets bigger and better equipment. But with the most elementary equipment, even the beginner can turn out nicely cut and polished stones. We feel that it is in the national interest to encourage people to take up gem cutting and polishing, for in time of emergency their technical skills and work benches may help in the production of lewel bearings and other items vital to defense

Many colleges and high schools offer lapidary courses where they leach the relatively simple cut called the "cabochon," and more complex procedures if the such cent has the aptitude for it. If it not difficult — the cent has the aptitude for it. If it not difficult — such all the gems fashioned from domestic minerals in the country come from the home workshops of these amateur lapidaries; commercial firms supply only a fraction of the total output.

So as you can see, rock-hounding is a burgeoning business, and as pleasant a one as you could ask for. With summer vacations coming up, and trips to beaches, streams and other gem-bearing areas in the offing, you might want to take a fling at it. A small fortune might be a stone's throw away.

MONACO: Liberty is on many than 100 foreign stamps

New York On Stamps

One of the three big shows which opened New York's brand-new Coliseum on April 28 was the Fifth International Philatelic Exhibition, New York seems a particularly appropriate site for the show, for in the past decade or so, many of the participating nations have adorned their stamps with New York sights.

The Statue of Liberty, for example, appears on the stamps of more than 100 countries. Another favorite is the United Nations, whose tenth anniversary in 1955 resulted in a cluster of issues. Perhaps the most unusual issue was the one by Monaco in 1947 honoring the centennial of the first United States postage stamps. It shows the General Post Office on Eighth Avenue. Of course, the principality's stamps have lately turned to weddings and such. - ERNEST A. KEHR when Mrs. Mathews started for the door. "Stay right where you are, Dex. It's my brother, and I know he'll want to talk to you."

The big man who walked into the room didn't have red cheeks like his sister; there wasn't much of his brown hair left, and he leaked time!

Mrs. Mathews said, "Dan, this is Dex. He's a seventh grader and he likes my cookies." She put her hands on the judge's shoulders. "You've walked too far again. Take off that coat and stretch out and relax." Judge Rosers winked at Dex. "Don't let a woman

Judge Rogers winked at Dex. "Don't let a woman start bossing you; she'll never let up." After he'd stretched out on the davenport, he turned to Dex. "Did you watch our baseball team last summer?"

Dex answered, "No, sir," the way his mother had taught him. "I came from New York three weeks ago." "We ought to feel proud to have a New Yorker with as in this one-horse town. How do you like the place?"

Dex swallowed hard. "My father — he died last month. I'm living with my Cousin Grace — Miss Weaver on Barlow Court. She's my father's cousin, once-removed," Onickly Mrs. Mathews said "How nice to be able to live with a relative."

Though Dex wanted to say, What do you mean—wice? he choked back the words.

The judge said, "When you grow up, Dex, what do you aim to be?"

For a long while he'd known the answer to that one. "Just like my father: I'm going into electroniss." He knew he ought to have stopped right three, but a foolish idea kept digging away at him; if he made himself took important, maybe Judge Roger would let him use that workshop. He said. "You know, my father left now the state of the said of the said to the said the said to t

Conversation came to a dead stop.
Mrs. Mathews said, "I'm glad on your account, Dex," And the judge said, "I wish somebody would leave me twenty-five thousand dollars."

Dex felt pretty sure they suspected him of lying; and of course he had been. But what he said next was strictly for true. "Judge Rogers, I've got all the radio tools my father had, and he taught me how to use them. There's an oscilloscope that cost more'n a hundred dollars; a signal tracer; is tube tester; an aligning kit and a lot more. I can do a soldering job that stays soldered." He looked hard at the judge and said, "I bet I could be a help to anybody working in electronics."

As he walked along Mound Street to Barlow Place, something in his mind kape repeating what his father once had said to him. Dex Plans His Escape told the judge about inheriting twenty-five thousand dollars. When Dex came into the kitchen Cousin Grace was scraping carrots. She was a woman of fifty-five; and her face was so full of Conscience and Duty that it might have been carved from a slab of Plymouth Rock. Looking up from the carrots, she said, Well, Dexter, how did school go today?

It was a change from the question he'd expected, which was What made you so late? And her voice was in kindly that it encouraged Dex to tell her the big idea which had come to him on the way back from Judge Rogers. He sat down and began,

When you and me got here from New York, the wastening under your sink was fouled. I opened it up. I fixed your lawn mower and I rewired your waffle iron. Now they both work."

"m pretty good at fixing things and especially anything electric." He scrunched to the front of the chair, "Right now Cousin Grace, there's only two places in this town where they fix radios and TV sets.

Cousin Grace didn't look up from her carrots T've worked on TV sets and I can fix radios as good as a lot of people who work at it full time. My father taught me." He paused. "Now if you'd let me use my room for - well, a shop, it wouldn't be any expense to you except a little juice for the soldering iron, and you could keep the profits. That way, I wouldn't feel alone all the time. And I've got all my tools Carrot in hand, Cousin Grace looked up steadily at Dex. "I'm sorry, Dexter, but that's impossible."

Dex jumped to his feet. "But it isn't impossible. I'll go from door to door getting business, because most everybody owns some gadget that won't work. I've got the know-how and those tools. Just let me show them to you,

He heard her voice protesting, but he ran up the stairs to his room, knelt down and looked under the bed.

The two big, wooden boxes were gone. They weren't anywhere in the room or in the closet. By the time he stumbled back into the kitchen, his legs weren't any too steady. "Cousin Grace, did - did you put 'em somewhere?"

She laid down the pan of carrots and the knife.

Dexter, when your father died, he didn't leave enough to pay his burial expenses. I paid that. And because I didn't want to see you go to an orphan asylum, I got legal charge of you. And after what I spent going to New York and paying for your father's funeral and all, I didn't have enough to get through the month. So I took those tools to the secondhand man and sold them."

For a moment Dex couldn't squeeze out a word. Then he heard his voice rising, "You can't do that, Cousin Grace, You can't do that. They belonged to my father and . After he was out of breath, she said, "In this world, Dexter, we have to learn to make the best of things. What's done is done. We can't change the past. I'm sorry it was necessary, but I couldn't act otherwise. Now you go up and wash for dinner.' He never remembered just how he got upstairs but, once there though he knew it was no use, he looked again under the bed and in the closet. Then he locked the door and, flopping down on the red comforter, buried his face in the pillow

It was eight-twenty-five by the little alarm clock on the commode when, finally, he sat up and turned on the light. He never answered when she'd called him to dinner because he knew he couldn't even sit across the table from Cousin Grace. Later, he'd heard the front door open and close when she left the house. Now as he sat up, he knew exactly what he was going to do. Under a loose corner of the linoleum, he'd hidden all his money, three dollars and seventeen cents. He dropped the coins into a pants pocket. Then, after slipping on his overcoat and hat, he went to the bureau for the little snapshot of his father Maybe some day, Dex, you'll want to know how your Old Man looked before he got to be the way he is now - like a scarecrow who's lost his stuffing. . . Dex. the simple facts of the case are that

I'm just a screwdriver mechanic with Edison ideas. . . But I never expected to be so broke as I um now. Not by any manner of means. Once I thought I'd have about twenty-five thousand hurks to leave you. Now there'll be nothing but that radio stuff. . . I've been a failure, Dex, and you'll do well to forget me. . . But you can't

At first Dex sort of boned the judge would so straight into the house; but he kept on straight ahead until he almost run into Dex. who was standing on the sidewalk in the shadow of the big butternut tree.

'Aren't you a little early? That Chicago train doesn't get here till ten-fifteen. Dex came out with what he intended to do. "I'm going to hop a freight, and I don't care where it goes." "A lot cheaper. Ever ridden that way before?" "No, but I've talked with guys who have "

"All right. Come along with me and I'll see that the police officer who tries to keen kids from hopping freights won't touch you As they walked along, Dex tried to explain about that lie, but he couldn't seem to begin, Finally, he blurted out fast, "Judge Rogers, what I told you about my father leaving me twenty-five thousand dollars was a - n -"An exaggeration?"

Der was glad the judge put it that way. though he felt it was more like a great big lie. "Everybody exaggerates," the judge said. Uncle Mike who was a prize fighter. Fact is, I never had an Uncle Mike."

That made Dex feel better. He said, "Anyhow, my father was the finest man ever, and that's no exaggeration; and the facts mu can't stand living any longer with Cousin Grace." He told about the selling of the tools.

Besides. I've got to have someone." "What do you mean, Dex?" "Courin Grace - I don't think she needs anybody, But I do. And living with her is like living alone. I have a dream when I go into a house looking for somebody who ought to be there. I go into all the rooms. Nobody. I yell; nobody answers. I couldn't help him much with the radio job: I could only be a sort of essistant. By the way, do you know the radio man I'm thinking of Dev couldn't believe he'd heard right: and when Judge Rogers repeated what he'd said, and then asked, "How does the idea strike you. Dex?" - all Dex could do was to say, "Oh, boy! Oh, boy!" Then his face clouded up and he began looking at the ground.

The Snarl And The Smile

successful putsch wasn't engineered by Zorin's brief visit. For two years, from 1945 to 1947, as the Soviet ambassador, he softened the country up, made it ripe and ready for his return. He came back as lord high executioner from Moscow, presiding over the death of a nation. West Germany, it is true, is not Czechoslovakia, yet Chancellor Adenauer is close to 80 years old, and the West can assume no such firm resolution from his potential successors as Adenauer displayed.

And Zorin's talents rate the highest marks in the Kremlin. He uses the snarl and the smile, terror and temptation. A little can go a long way for Zorin, who has known maness as an old Communist party intriguer, a Soviet ambassador, United Nations delegate and Deputy Foreign Minister.

His technique has been substantially the same all his care Soften the quarry up with threats, appeals to "logic" and blandishments - but soften them up. Moscow couldn't wait to dispatch him posthaste to the top priority Soviet target in Europe, perhaps in the world - West Germany

Moscow's Toughest Operator

Veteran Western diplomats agree from bitter experience that Zorin is the slickest, toughest operator Moscow could have tapped for the job at hand

Zorin didn't come by this frightening reputation naturally. Between learning and loving music, even dabbling in poetry, he became a specialist in Marxism and got promotions where they count most in the Soviet Union. Purging friends and buttering up enemies he could brush aside later, Zorin carefully picked his way up the ranks of the Communist Party. He's a likely new member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, next in importance to the Presidium. This would make him, far and away, the most important Communist holding down a foreign diplomatic assignment.

Make Or Break

Here in West Germany, Valerian Zorin will make or break him self. If he goes home a success, it will mean the grand alliance of the free world is wrecked or badly imperiled. Zorin has a huge obstacle course to cover. The Czech putsch, which took three years, was a breeze compared with what faces him in West Germany. This prospering, free-enterprise, three-fourths of divided Germany is overwhelmingly anti-Communist and anti-Soviet To make her free-world associations more binding. West Germany is a full-fledged ally and keystone of NATO.

And the press reception accorded Comrade Zorin on his arrival here was what you would expect in view of these facts. "Bonn is not Prague," he was bluntly warned, "and no weak Benes heads the German state," One diplomat who knows Zorin says that he was "terribly unhappy and very disappointed at the bad press he has received in Germany worry, even with so sharp a hatchet man as Zorin on the scene? But the Soviet ambassador didn't come to the Federal Republic relying only on his wits. He has the enormous bait of German unification to dangle before hopeful German eyes. Only the Soviet Union can, without war, enable Germany to recover her national identity and national life, and the longer the Russians run the east zone of Germany the more it becomes communized. Behind the powerful lever of unification, Zorin has other useful weapons. Trade is one, not the traditional Balkan trade, but something far more tantalizing - business with Red China.

In Germany, unlike Czechoslovakia, Zorin cannot manipulate a Communist party in Parliament. The comrades were unable to elect a single candidate to the Bundestag. But they have been clawing their way unobtrusively into the nerve center of the Federal Republic, gaining ground in the union councils of industry. Count on Zorin to exploit and expand the infiltration, Zorin's terms of reference for softening up West Germany are probably pretty elastic. There is undoubtedly a maximum and minimum program. The maximum, of course, is complete communization of Germany - West and East. Minimum means neutralization of Germany and withdrawal from NATO. Either could spell disaster for the Western world.

Since he arrived here Zorin has been acting like a man in a hurry. Very protocol-conscious in Czechoslovakia, where I talked to him, he has ignored the diplomatic book in Bonn. He personally calls on minor officials, is available - in fluent German - for speaking engagements. He intends to see the leading members of every provincial government in West Germany.

"Ice-Cold Logic"

Zorin caught Stalin's eve when he was working an 18-hour day as secretary of the Central Committee of Comsomol, the Communist youth organization. His career went steadily forward until as a reward for his work in Czechoslovakia, he was made a Deputy Foreign Minister. Then he served a couple of hitches at the United Nations. A high Western diplomat who negotiated frequently with Zorin recalls the experience this way 'His logic was always ice cold - even when he lied. When you'd try to rough him up he'd quote Pushkin and talk of music. He'd say, 'Angry men have no songs.' He's the ablest, most ruthless Russian trouble shooter around, including Molotov,

To help out in his softening-up jobs, Zorin has a No. I assistant, almost a match for the master in trouble-making. This is jolly Sergei Mikhailovitch Koudriavtzev, a round little 220pounder with three chins who did the spade work for the Canadian spy ring. Speaking six languages besides Russian. Koudriavtzev has an unbroken record for hatching trouble wherever he happens to land.

"Between Zorin and Koudriavtzev," a West German official fresh from the U.S. told mm bitterly, "we have the outside and inside men of the Skunkworks."

Zorin couldn't care less what you call him, as long as he isn't called a failure in Moscow. Right now he is busy making, as he says, "practical friends." The rambling villa in which he is installed lacks the usual Soviet security guards, and commands a view of Chancellor Adenauer's house across the Rhine Chances are Zorin will rarely glance Adenauer's way. He will look around and past him to the day forecast by his chief, Khrushchev, who brutally told the aged, embattled Chancellor in Moscow: "You won't be around forever." If the ground in Germany is ever soft enough and everything comes up for grabs, Zorin will be around to grab - first and most. - The End

American Medical Association

Can you tell a real medical advance from an over-optimistic claim? Here are tips

> By DONALD A. DUKELOW M.D. Bureau of Health Education

When Adam appraised the apple by adding taste to his other observations, he started a neverending chain of evaluating new discoveries Each of us, whether trained or not, feels that his own judgment of a new medical discovery is exactly right. We may even test it - as Adam did. There are so many discoveries, nowadays, and we learn about them so quickly through our newspapers, magazines, radio and television! What we need is a reliable but simple method of non-medical evaluation of medical discoveries. The first thing to do in evaluating a new story about a medical discovery is to read it with an open mind. To discover all the facts, both good and bad, the whole article should be read - not just the headlines and the lead paragraph. The limitations and dangers usually are discussed in the paragraphs near the end. Be particularly careful of emotional bias affecting evaluation when the medical discovery concerns some health problem you or your loved ones have. It could lead to disappointment - and to worse, because of delay in using some older and better known treatment

Kipling once wrote, in "The Elephant's Child,"

"I keep six honest serving-men (They taught me all I know); Their names are What and Why and When

And How and Where and Who. These "six honest serving-men" can serve you too, as the basis for your evaluation of medical discoveries. They are the questions to ask about every discovery coming to your attention.

"What?" Is this a vaccine, a drug, a gadget or a new way of doing something? Is it related to other things known to be true and other accepted discoveries, or is it a lone "maverick"? Is it promoted as a "sure cure," a "wonder a "world-changing discovery"? Or is it reported honestly for what it is?

"Why?" Why is this discovery being made or inced now? Is it announced before a fund drive? Can you detect any indications that the researcher's desire for the answer he wants influenced the results?

"When?" When was the discovery made that you read about today? If a few days ago, is it so new that its usefulness and safety can hardly be more than guessed at? If several months ago, has it been impartially studied in the meantime so that its value is known? Developments of real significance do not suffer by delays in announcement. Questionable items must be promoted quickly before their faults are dis-

"How?" How did this discovery come about? Was the research that led to it planned? Who paid for it? Does the source of funds suggest a bias in interpreting the results? And is the scientist who made the discovery free to announce his failures us well us his successes? "Where?" The place of a disery may influence its acceptability. A large hospital or laboratory - Continued on next page

By FRED M. HECHINGER

PROFESSOR FROEHLICH: "Parents think engineering is heavy, dirty work. Nonsense"

This spring, more than 5,000 organizations have been combing the nation's campuses, trying to capture most sought-after collegians of all time — the 1956 class of engineers. These firms have about 50,000 jobs open and there are fever than 25,000 prospective graduates. This is a serious deficit — one that could hinder America's ceitnife moreones at a critical time. One

This is a serious defect—one that could hinder America's scientific progress at a critical time. One rarely cited reason for it is the fact that engineering students are drawn largely from the male half of the population. Girls just don't go into engineering.

Prejudice And Misconceptions

Why aren't there more women engineers, I asked her as the office. "There are number of reasons," also said.
"The most serious one is that most girls don't get the right kind of preparation in high school. They just don't study enough mathematics, and that is something you can't undo later. Even among the boys there are few who get an adequate mathematics background." Professor Foreshich also lays the barne on prejudice and misconception. "People say that these are not feminine occupations," the explained. "Plarnets think"

She continued: "We had a brilliant little Chinese girl

That was the way it started. The walls didn't come tumbling down, but Miss Froehlich rose to the job of scientific assistant to the vice-president of Germany's largest manufacturer of electrical machines.

Hitter came and, because Professor Froehlich is Jewish, abe had to leave the country, for a while she weeke

For a while they seemed to think they had bought a talking horse: everybody came around just to have a look at me. "Cecille Froehlich had opened another door.

But the Nazi armies advanced. After a nightmare of hiding and laboring on farms — "That's pat. You don't want to hear about it and I don't want to talk about it" — she came to the United States in 1941. "I wanted to work in industry. But I found the doors closed. The war was on, and here I was a German and an enemy even though in Germany I had been considered an enemy, too." (Ten years later, she was working as a consultant on top-secret research.)

City College needed engineers even in 1941. "They gave me an emergency appointment just because they couldn't get anybody better." Today Professor Froeh-lich runs the college's largest engineering department, with 35 teaching faculty members and about 1,500 students—almost half of City's engineering enrollment. MOVEABLE rattan furnishes family room by John Wisner

Summer Indoors

Rattan is decorator's choice for informal family room

The second living room is taken for granted for suburban homes. It's the old game or playroom but with a new dressed-up look.

Good choice for furnishing the new family room is rattan. The scheme shown above was worked out by John B. Wisner, member of the American Institute of Decorators, who not only designs rooms but also is a designer of furniture for Ficks Reed. Mr. Wisner's family room has a floor of gray and coral tile. Sectional seating units are an advantage in a room designed for television, playing bridge or youngsters' play. Rattan comes in dark stains and colors, often with color accents. ---- HARRIET MORRISON

Added Flavor

Liqueur is used tu complement food tastes

The flavor and warmth of liqueurs has been the basis for a varied range in usage. Originally their chief purpose was medicinal. Then they became popular in postprandial (after-dinner) soothers. Now, they are beginning to find great favor in menu schemes - wherever their aromatic substances and sweetness complement kindred flavors. Transfer them to a pitcher and let guests pour-it-themselves over fruit or ice cream. Combine with other beverages; use as a flavoring ingredient in sauces and salads. One of these spirituous liquots is Cherry Heering. It has been produced by the same family for 125 years; the cherries come from the clan's orchards. See and taste its distinctive color and flavor in the following recipes.

Cherry Banana Cream 1/4 cup mashed banana

These little sundresses were designed by Miriam Norville for Borgenicht Bros. Each combines two or more prints - solid, large dots and stripes, all in matching colors The dresses are sleeveless, with simple, piped bodices, large bow sashes and very full, stand-out skirts. Colors are glacier blue and pink ice, which should make any little girl feel cool on a hot summer day.

Each sundress, made of Everglaze-finished cotton, has bloomers of a print that contrasts with the skirt. Everything, of course, is washable. Sizes range from 3 to 6X and 7 to 10. - JOAN RATTNER

Cheese Party, Swiss Style

By CLEMENTINE PADDLEFORD

This Week Food Editor

Try this European fondue supper at home

Melted choses bubbled in the pot over the little blue flame. "Don't talk now, let's eat before it goes stringy," said my host, breaking a crisp-crusted roll into bletse pieces. Each piece, he was telling me, must show one edge of crusts or be times of the fork can gar it good hold. Guests were busy now, pressing the long, ground-handled forks, into the broad through the Guests were buy now, pressing the long, round-handled forks into the bread, through the soft crumb and into the crust. Dip and swift through the bubbling cheese. Lift the fork and turif to catch and wind up the drips; into the mouth. Forks flourished with asteomding dexterity. I was filled with admiration, also ensy, "No fiddling," said the man on my left, dunk-

"No fiddling," said the man on my left, dunking his bread into the bowl and stirring, "Juss a greenhorn at this party. "Just one way to keep the mixture to a proper consistency."
"Get a tight hold on your fork," he warned.

"If the bread slips off, you must pay the penalty—a kiss for each man; or if a man loses his bite of bread, he must pay with a bottle of wine." Guess my secret? "I'm a guest at a fondue party being given in Geneva, Switzerland. I had gone to the land of the Alps not to ski but to see Swiss cheese in the making. My stay ended in Geneva where I learned about fondue. The Swiss in our own "Little Switzerland," centered in Green County, Wis., have their fondue parties, but the rest of the United States knows little about this party dish, one of the simplest, best tasting and most congenial mixtures in the

Basically this is little more than a Welsh rabbit combined with a yodel. But never let a Swiss hear you say such a thing, or a Welsham either. Yet it's the honest truth. There are differences in the ingredients and in the preparation, but the big difference is in the manner of its eatine.

A Saturday-Night Soiree

The fondue party in Geneva was given in a bassement room of an ins specializing in such suppers, which are a traditional Saturdasvinght affair. Six of use that evening and were seated at a long table in a room wood-passed, but a long table in a room wood-passed but a long table in a Apéritifs were served — vermouth and mineral water, kirsch with vermouth. Came the plates of crisp-crusted rolls. Two pepper mills were placed within convenient reach. Plates of thinly sliced sour pickle were handy by.

ALPINE TREAT: Seated at a long table, everybody dipped into the same bowl of fondue

I was seated by Mr. Henri Tanner, whose little winged beard exactly matched his eyebrows. This man is connected with one of the country's leading dairy firms and is known also in literary circles for his light verse. He has written a book on fondue which reads half and He has written a book on rondue which reads hair and half between poetry and prose. When the wine came it was a white wine from Aigle. "It must be a white wine with fondue," Mr. Tanner said, "and never, never beer or the result might be a severe case of indigestion. And Mr. Tanner doesn't think much either of the idea of drinking a cold wine while eating the bubbling not of cheese. He said it is better to wait until the fondue is finished. After two chafing dishes were dunked off, we were done with it.

White Wine And Coffee

At this moment the waiters carried in plates of the sliced, air-dried beef from the Ardennes, a luxury in Switzerland. Now we drank more white wine and the party ended with coffee.

I asked about the origin of "la fondue," No one knew the true answer. It is a very old dish in the regions where cheese is produced. For a long time it was a tioned in the early classical literature on culinary arts, maybe due to its humble origin. Brillat-Savarin, at the end of the 18th century, was the first one to refer to fondue in his book, "The Physiology Of Taste." He collected the recipes from one M. Trolliet who had been overseer of the - Continued on next page town of Moudon, then a dependency of the city of Berne. This fondue was made from eggs and Gruyère cheese. Some think the dish evolved from a cheese soup.

Today fondue has a wide regional use and is made by recipes differing from canton to canton. "The cheese is the basic ingredient, and should come," Mr. Tanner told me, "from the Gruyère or Jura country. It should be firm yet soft enough to squeeze gently between the fingers It should leave on the palate a definite clean taste with no bitterness," Some mix Emmental cheese with the Gruvère. In Mr. Tanner's opinion this does not improve the fondue He thinks the combination results from a desire to express Swiss solidarity. In the United States, fondue is made usually of Emmental alone which is what we know here as Switzerland Swiss cheese - or Swiss cheese, if American made. In some cantons only one wine is used, in others a combination. Here is the dish as it is made in the Geneva restaurant, with slight variations. There they use the two kinds of cheese. We suggest only the Swiss which is easily come by, with white wine and kirsch; be liberal with the garlic. Fondus at home is made at the table and has a tendence to curdle so must be closely watched. Make it in a earthenware casserole placed over an alcohol stove with a flame easily adjustable. Or use an electric plate, if you wish, with an ashestos rad If eight are eating, have two casseroles, one at each end of the table. Accompany the cheese with a tray of bread cubes cut from a French loaf. We think it's better and neater to have the bread already prepared. For every guest, a small glass to hold the kirschwasser or a white Swiss wine, this to sip between bites: or take Mr. Tanner's advice and drink it after the dish is eaten.

Rub split garlic around sides of earthenware dish. Dredge cheese in flour (Swiss and German cooks use potato flour) Pour wine into dish and heat until almost boiling. Add cheese to wine with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Stir constantly with wooden spoon until fondue starts to bubble. Add kirsch or cognac and serve hot over an alcohol lamp. If the fondue becomes too thick, stir in a little pre-heated wine. Yield: 6 to II portions. --- The End

m OU\ NAME\ IT-engine,\ transmission,\ brakes,\ steering,}$ performance, comfort, safety, style-from any angle you can't beat a '56 General Motors car in its price range.

Each one—Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Buick and Cadillac—has the highest-compression V8 engine in its history, the result of GM's 42 years of pioneering in developing V8 power. And with them you can enjoy thrilling advances in Powerglide, Dynaflow and Hydra-Matic automatic transmissions that harness this livelier power with super-smoothness and give you a greater margin of safety.

Add to this such pace-setting styles as the panoramic windshield and the four-door hardtop. Such security "first" as precision-aimed head lamps and interlocking safetytype door locks. Power steering, power brakes and seat belts are also available. Any way you look at it—your key to greater value in 1956 is the key to a CM car.
